

Appendix Figure 1. Idealized flow cytometric curves to illustrate how the percentage of cells staining positively is determined. The percentage of cells staining positively for a cell surface marker is determined by subtracting the autofluorescence of the cells from the fluorescence of the stained cells. Autofluorescent cells are depicted as the solid line; stained cells are shown as the dotted line.