Hotel industry struggling with 'labor crisis'

Without sufficient staffs, some hotels have had to turn business away

Hotels facing staffing shortage ahead of summer

Fox News' Robert Sherman reports on the latest.

The sounds of searing scallions and clanking glasses echo around the restaurant in the Riverside Hotel, one of Fort Lauderdale's many hotels. The guests who fill the outdoor spaces can't help but rush to the water's edge to watch the massive yachts and sailboats go by.

The hotel is busy, that much is obvious. However, the family-owned property has had its fair share of struggles in recent months.

"The first four months of this year were the toughest in the three decades I’ve been in this industry," Heiko Dobrikow, who has been the hotel's general manager for the last 11 years, told Fox News. "And I've been through a lot of downturns, from 9/11 to the Great Recession and so forth."

Despite Americans flocking to Florida's beaches and theme parks and occupying hotels like Dobrikow's, properties are having a difficult time finding enough employees to meet the demand.

“It is pretty much across the board,” said Dobrikow. “Whether it’s guest service agents, whether it is room attendants, whether it’s housekeepers.”

Typically, the hotel has 300 employees. Today, the headcount sits closer to 175. While the team at Riverside has figured out how to make things work while short-staffed, it did hamper the hotel’s ability to operate.

“We had to turn business away,” said Dobrikow. "There was a time, a two-week period where we didn’t have enough cooks to prepare the orders for all the guests that were here."

The reality is the Riverside Hotel is not an outlier, and Florida is not the exception to the rule. The industry, as a whole, is down about 2.8 million jobs since pre-pandemic levels in February 2020, according to the April jobs report. The industry unemployment rate of 10.8% outpaces the national rate of 6.1%.

The latest numbers from the April jobs report show the hospitality industry is down over 2 million jobs since February 2020.

Even so, workers are seemingly nowhere to be found.

Carol Dover, CEO of the Florida Restaurant and Lodging Association, said it doesn’t matter if it’s the most glamorous beach resort or a small-town property just off the interstate. Everyone is feeling the pain.
"We do have a labor crisis. We're actually calling it the 'new pandemic,'" Dover told Fox News. "Places are closing just because they don't have staff."

Dover explained that the issue is two-fold. On the one hand, workers in the hospitality industry who were furloughed during the pandemic found employment elsewhere and have no reason to come back. On the other hand, state and federal unemployment benefits are making it so workers feel less incentive to rejoin the labor force.

"It's very obvious that we're paying people too much money to stay home," said Dover. "Businesses across the country are in straight-line competition with the government because the government is paying them so much money to stay home."

Some hoteliers are trying to incentivize new employees to sign on with higher wages, bonuses, and even more perks, according to Dover. Yet still, the interest in joining an industry ravaged by the pandemic is sparse.

"We've had job fairs across the entire state. Nobody shows up," said Dover.

Abraham Pizam, a professor at The University of Central Florida's Rosen College of Hospitality Management, suspects the industry will see a massive overhaul in the short-term future.

Specifically, he believes hotels will have to adjust the business models to be competitive with not just other hotels but other industries.

"[The hotels] were quick to furlough those employees because they did not have the funds to pay them," Pizam told Fox News. "And so, they went elsewhere. Unfortunately, elsewhere paid better."
"In the long run, they need to restructure themselves to be more competitive in terms of labor with other industries that pay a little bit more."

"Normalcy" is what many aspire for, yet Pizam believes things will never quite be completely as they were before the pandemic hit. But, when it comes to getting back to a similar pre-pandemic position, that could require two to three years of patience.

"To return to what it was. To return to the old normal," said Pizam. "For now, what we will have for the next year is the ‘new normal.’ The new normal is significantly less than the old one, but it’s climbing up gradually."

Dobrikow, however, feels optimistic. He and his staff say they're trying to get creative, looking to military veterans and fresh graduates to pad their workforce.

His hope is things improve in the fall as more Americans get vaccinated and some pandemic unemployment benefits sunset. A number of states say they will stop paying $300 unemployment checks this summer.

"Hopefully, we as an industry will recover. Hopefully, we will see a labor force feeling more confident in getting back to work," said Dobrikow. "And that’s how we're gonna have to manage it."

Why work when the Democrats will pay for you to stay home.

In Indiana - "As it stands now, the maximum state unemployment payment is $390 a week. Through the CARES Act, people who are unemployed can also collect a $300-a-week supplemental federal payment on top of state benefits. This totals to $690 per week, or $17.25 an hour."

REPUBLICANS ARE THE PARTY OF WALL STREET WELFARE, THEIR motto is "it's always a great time to BAIL OUT WALL STREET, but it's never a good time to raise the federal minimum wage"!

Time to return to CAPITALISM!!!!

CAP corp exec total compensation at 10 times an employee total compensation. take away their INCENTIVE for corruption and killing, like Big Pharma and BOEING. After all, corp execs have been capping employee wage increases at 1-2% increase for years.

Plenty ready to take their place, and they get the great opportunity to start their own small business.

extra money not to work. what could possibly go wrong?

if you can't pay $15 an hour and healthcare................GO BANKRUPT!!!!

THE TAXPAYERS ARE TIRED OF PICKING UP THE BUSINESSES TAB FOR HEALTHCARE!

TIPS.....ARE JUST THE CUSTOMERS PAYING THE wages for the businesses!

great news................WIPE OUT THE BUSINESSES WHO LOBBIED AGAINST raising the federal minimum wage

Why doesn't a dog get up o of a rusty nail?
It doesn't hurt enough.

Some folks are content staying home 'earning' more free cheese than if .. They go back to work and feel a sense of pride and accomplishment.

Those commenting on 'livable' wage:
The folks staying home cuz they are making more doing nothing .......See more sounds like corp execs.................living off bailouts by the taxpayers!!!

if you can't pay $15 an hour and healthcare...............GO BANKRUPT!!!
go to “federalpay.org”..............32,000 supposedly small businesses received 10 MILLION of taxpayer dollars each! AND THEY LAID OFF EMPLOYEES!!!!!

now those same businesses are lobbying against raising the federal minimum wage...........................let the fuuuuuuuuuuuucccccers GO BANKRUPT!!!

I guarantee the extra unemployment bonus will stop any week now. But if these companies paid their employees a livable wage, I bet that worker shortage will stop as well. Would you want to work serving people during covid, for $7.25 an hour (or whatever minimum wage is these days)?

I know Trump follower want to blame the very stimulus package that kept many families and businesses from going under, from the effects of Covid. But you know what really makes people want to work? Paying them a livable wage. (Edited)

Wrong. I live 1 mile from The Riverside Hotel ... beautiful spot and they treat their employees VERY well. 2 of their 'former' employees are tenants of mine. Both said they're hoping Riverside rehires them as they loved working there. I asked why they don't go back now - as Riverside needs them. They both said the same thing ; 'No, not yet. I'm making the same staying home' *

Jeesh!!! (Edited)
