

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

First and foremost, I acknowledge the Creator for life, health, and strength for the journey. Second, to the ancestral spirits who have gone before me, sacrificed, and paved the way for me to reap the rewards of their labor, I give thanks.

There are many individuals who have invested in my educational pursuits. To my wife, Jean, thanks for your support, encouragement, and comfort during those dark nights of the soul, while you were pregnant with Kyle, I raced to complete this research project. I am eternally indebted to you.

I am also grateful for the support of my parents, Charles and Ernestine Herndon. Thanks for inspiring me to pursue my career and educational goals. Both of you are excellent role models and mentors for our family. My in-laws, Les and Betty Booker are acknowledged for their support of my endeavors as well.

To my dissertation research committee, who provided equal amounts of challenge and support throughout the doctoral process. Thank God for people like Joan Hirt, my advisor, who believed in my abilities and patiently assisted me with revisions of this research project. To Don Creamer and his "come to Jesus" chats with me--I hope, by now, that I have finally seen the light.

I am also grateful to Elizabeth Creamer who initially encouraged me to develop this research project. She also sequestered me to her basement apartment for a month, during the final stages of my research. To Delores Scott, thanks for schooling me on the politics of the doctoral process. I am appreciative of Gloria Bird who piqued my curiosity for research in family studies.

Kudos are also in order for other members of my family (Aunt Ethel, Aunt Mattie, Charlotte and Hugo, Charles, Jr., Demetria, Anthony, and Junior), including my extended and fictive kin. Your telephone calls prayers, e-mail, and friendship were invaluable during the final stages of my degree program. To Pastors James Taylor, III and Ron Freeman and members of my church families (Race Street Baptist Church, Farmville, VA and Saint Paul African Methodist Episcopal Church, Blacksburg, VA), your spiritual support sustained me in the last days of this project.

Finally, I am grateful for a wealth of colleagues and friends who propelled me out of the dissertation doldrums all the way to the final defense: Phyllis Mable, Tim Pierson, Hayward Farrar, Terry Kershaw, James Moore, III, Carol Sue Slusser, Jamie Ealy, Darrell Hairston, Diana Ridgwell, Wanda Smith, and Melendez Byrd.
