

Theorizing “Ecological Communication”

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Abstract.....	ii
Acknowledgements.....	v
Preface.....	1
Chapter I: A Contemporaneous Theoretical Profile of Ecological Communication and Some New Avenues.....	7
Chapter II: The Roads Not Taken: Futuristic Lessons for Theorizing Ecological Communication.....	34
Chapter III: Gregory Bateson’s Cybernetic Framework.....	62
Chapter IV: Niklas Luhmann’s Communicative Systems Theory Framework.....	82
Chapter V: A Theoretical Heuristic: Technological Forms & their Relationship with Ecological Communication.....	121
Chapter VI: The Nation-State as an Ecological Communicator: The Case of Indian Nuclear Tests.....	169
Chapter VII: In Place of a Conclusion.....	194
Selected Bibliography.....	202
Curriculum Vitae.....	215

TABLE OF FIGURES

Technology's Relationship to Ecological Communication: Dependence; Vulnerability; Immunity

Figure 1: The Principle of Proximation.....	198
Figure 2: The Principle of Concentration.....	198
Figure 3: The Principle of Temporality.....	199
Figure 4: The Principle of Anthropocentrism.....	201
Figure 5: The Principle of Uncertainty.....	201

Acknowledgements

Wonderful people, I would like to thank you all:

Ann F. La Berge: for your humanist warmth, whose traces are rare in our contemporary world, especially in the academy; and for your love of ideas and life, brutal honesty, and unending appreciation of difference.

Darleen Baker: for prodding me into wrapping it all up fast and helping me through the paper work as a departmental secretary for Political Science; also, for one of your offers of help that had a culturally alien charm, and your helping me indeed severally as an ideal family member ideally would.

Marc Barany: for your brotherly warmth, beers, and promise of a lifelong friendship.

Frankie Adam Bausch: for your resolute stand that Luhmann can be read, indeed ought to be read, and for your occasional, “sly” conversations with me on many other academic topics.

Jeffry M. Buechler: for your stand-by-you spirit, timely help packages of all kinds, and resolute rejection of discontinuities in life.

Ben Capozzi: for your potent, sunny advice: “Face your life with an open fist!”

David Clark, Diane Pfeiffer, & Jeremy Hunsinger: for telling me useful things about the future on the basis of your own distinctive pasts; and, in the case of Jeremy: special thanks for helping me so very kindly with the ETD and for giving me a number of helpful guidelines regarding my professional future.

Ellsworth R. Fuhrman: for your positive feedback to my dissertation, which has meant a lot to me through the big low point that my stay has been in Blacksburg! Thanks also for breaking your own convention by accepting to come to my Summer defense, which was supposed to be a vacation for you (and for some other committee members as well).

Wyatt Galusky, Andrew Garnar, Eric Lewis, Gopal, Tom Bigley, Jean Miller, Karen Snider, Debbie Law, Crystal Crigger, & Rachel Hall: for your collective and individual acts of sweetness which I will never forget.

Saul E. Halfon: for working with me despite the constraints of my schedule, and for your critical review of my work. Your review will help me immensely in improving the quality of my account.

Bradley A. Kelley: or your support of secularism, and for inadvertently showing the limits to (our department’s) rationality.

Jane Lehr and Johnson (Juggler) Miller: for embodying truth and beauty through the performances of intelligent activism.

Tim Luke: for accepting to be the chair of my dissertation committee (not an advisable, certainly not an enviable, position for any sane human), and for staying on it as such despite the dissertation itself! More seriously: Thank you, thank you, thank you, for finding the time out of your impossibly busy schedule, and for working with me despite my inefficiencies. Thanks also for writing all those wonderful, inspiring books, at least one of which is already quite a classic.

Meenakshi Mukherjee: for betting on this clumsy mule of a student!

Members of the SCIC and the University Club: for your familial support of me through my stay in Blacksburg.

Nirupam & Neelam, my c-o-o-l sisters: for filling up my wardrobe with beautiful clothes sent from India!, and Kumkum, yet another c-o-o-l sister: for buying me the ticket to the US the first time I got here.

Dave Murphy: for providing me with pertinent historical insights into both general, academic and local, departmental topics, and for welcoming me with open arms whenever I needed to mess with an interesting mind in Mill Mt. Coffee & Tea.

Nina Sengupta: for giving me prudent and insightful advices on a range of topics, both personal and professional, and for your enduring friendship.

Robert Siegle: for the courage to import the heretofore unpredictable, alien problematic of Piyush, and for never failing to make him believe that he might actually be his own solution.

Michael Smith: for some fine conversations on a ton of intellectual issues, and for introducing me to the writings of Chellis Glendinning and Ramsey Clark, among others.

Len Hatfield: for providing me with the space—in all senses of the term; for warmly accepting me as an off-and-on employee and despite my fallibilities and inefficiencies; and for doing so much else for me, none of which you were obligated to do.

Thomas C. Kerr: if only I had the words --:) I really, really don't! No kidding.

Chikako Takeshita: for your gritty, absolutely priceless friendship, overall insight, sharp intellect, and subtle wit. Also for bringing Claire into Blacksburg!

Tyler Veak: for your proven inability to “accept difference,” “excessive use of humor and irony,” but most importantly: for your standing up for me whenever I was under unwarranted attacks from the powers that be. With friends like you, who needs uncles, (Indian) barbers, and godfathers?

John M. Wall: for the stuff that a U.S. President may well be made of --:)

Paul Shortt & Seneca Haynes: for your youthful wisdoms and highly sustaining companies.

Maryam Majidy, Kenroy Walker, Jay Miranda, Wairimu N’Jambi: O, for the innocent days of yore!

Daniel Yates: for sharing your savvy insights into a truly great variety of topics.

I would also like to acknowledge the support of many other Blacksburgians whose names I have happened to miss!

Piyush Mathur
Blacksburg, Virginia,
July 28, 2003.