

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Completing a dissertation is not an individual project; therefore, there are many people who should be recognized. I would first like to thank the middle school principals who so willingly participated in this study. Not only did these principals give their time, but they also gave me support and encouragement. I would also like to thank my dear friends and colleagues (some happen to be both!) who allowed me to impinge upon their time by listening to me as I exclaimed my weariness with this project. They, too, encouraged me by continually telling me how proud they were of me. Also, I wish to thank Drs. Ethel Mitchell and Beth Smith for assisting me with the data analysis by serving as interraters. I could not have completed the study without their help.

I am convinced this study would never have been completed were it not for the diligence and support of my advisor, Dr. Claire Cole Vaught. I am not sure she knows how much her words of encouragement helped me to persevere. Her gentle way of assisting has made me reexamine the way I interact with others. I think I have become a kinder, gentler human being. I wish also to thank the other members of my committee, Dr. Wayne Worner, Dr. Glen Earthman, Dr. Jim Fortune, and Dr. Glenn Koonce. I trust that my work will make each of them proud. Their comments were always taken in the spirit in which I know they were intended—to make the study stronger, better.

Lastly, I know that I have been blessed with a loving, wonderful family. They have always supported EVERYTHING I have ever attempted. This project was no different. Each gave me the time and space I needed—even when I knew they needed me. I hope to once again become a contributing member of our family.
