It was kind of awkward to not be able to see/hear the other participant knowing that he could see/hear me, but it wasn't that weird. I did feel that I kind of 'dominated,' for lack of a better word, the decisions more than he did because it was easier for me to talk than it was for him to type.

I went kind of fast in this one and would have actually chosen the wrong kns if I had just had all 4 requirements and did it at that speed on my own. OOPS.

It is interesting to communicate w/a stranger through the use of the audio visual equipment. It's much more awkward than face-to-face contact. I felt a weird need to uphold some sort of conversation while the microphones were on.
It's also uncomfortable/weird because you cannot really make eye contact w/ the other person.

This was more difficult to complete since it involved a subjective element in the decision-making process
