Acknowledgments

I would like to acknowledge the help and expertise of Dr. Joann Boles, committee chairman, in the conception and development of this study. Her knowledge and professional work in the area of creativity and apparel design served to give a foundation and depth to this research. The time and interest of the other committee members was also greatly appreciated; Dr. Cerny, through her teaching and critique of the literature review, Dr. Janet Sawyers, by challenging my thinking and helping refine the final manuscript, and Dr. John Dickey, through his interest of the subject and the positive encouragement offered.

This study would not have been possible without the two participants, a weaver and a costume designer. Through their willingness to share their personal experiences and allow me a large portion of their time, this research was made possible.

I would like to recognize Jennie Lynn Clevenger, a fellow colleague, who gave of her time and interest to this project. A lot of support and help with detailed paperwork came from Dove Robertson, secretary for the Department of Near Environments. Rebecca Wood gave of her editing expertise and encouragement. Others I would like to thank are Peggy Quesenberry, for technical help and encouragement; Janet Wimmer, for her interest and computer expertise; and Rosemary Bowden, for her help with library references, as well as her friendship.

Last, but not least, I want to acknowledge my family for their support as I put in late nights and long hours. My husband, Alan Beach for proofreading and giving suggestions and support through the whole process. To my son, Nathan, for his help with computer related problems and the production of the figures in this study. To my daughter, Laura, my thanks for her encouragement during the writing of this manuscript.
