

Final Thoughts

Belief, as with faith, comes from within. It is my belief that the complicated forces evolving our world can allow a balance, but not necessarily an equilibrium to be reached. The application of the theory $1+1=3$ to the initiation of a hill town village in Virginia is successful because the unity of the given forces was controllable as needed, and were complementary where each contributory force needed to be controlled separately.

The disregard of this unity and synthesizing process is responsible for the current plight of urban decay in both large cities and small towns. Decay which will not be remedied until the need for synthesis of dispersant forces is recognized and implemented.

I begin to apply the concept of the unit of the town presented here and the forces realized in the Italian hilltowns elsewhere. Cannot an office building, or a school be generated in the same unifying and complimenting means?
