The Cultivation of a Teacher in a Classroom Community

by

Melinda A. Mottley

A Thesis submitted to the Faculty of Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of

MASTER OF SCIENCE

in

Human Development

APPROVED:

Andrew J. Stremmel, Ph.D. (Chairperson)                      MaryAlice Barksdale, Ed.D

Victoria R. Fu, Ph.D.                                                         Lynn T. Hill, Ph.D.

May 2003
Blacksburg, Virginia

Keywords: teacher research, beginning teaching, self-study

Copyright 2003, Melinda A. Mottley
The Cultivation of a Teacher in a Classroom Community

Melinda A. Mottley

(ABSTRACT)

The purpose of this study was to examine the dilemmas and tensions the researcher encountered as a teacher in a university-based lab school. Specifically, she examined the tensions within the context of the seemingly contradictory role expectations that were required of her as a student who was also a teacher.

This autobiographical form of self-study was based on the principles of action research, of linking theory and practice through a cyclical process of action and reflection. The findings were reported in a narrative form and describe the process of how one woman came to know and understand herself as a teacher and an individual through her life inside and outside of the classroom.
Table of Contents:

CHAPTER ONE: Introduction ................................................................. 1
CHAPTER TWO: Literature Review ....................................................... 7
CHAPTER THREE: Methods ................................................................. 19
CHAPTER FOUR: Peeling Back the Layers ........................................... 26
CHAPTER FIVE: Lessons from the Children ........................................ 45
REFERENCES ...................................................................................... 52