What's the Big Deal? How & Why Institutions Around the World are Rethinking Their Biggest Journal Bundles

4:15 p.m. - 5:30 p.m. Keynote - Newman Library 1st floor MPR

1:00 p.m. - 2:30 p.m. Meet & Greet - Newman Library 427

For the last two decades, research institutions have been buying research the same way consumers have been buying television: in big bundles. And like big cable packages, these bundles have become bloated with content nobody wants, and their prices have exploded at rates only a monopolist could love. Come learn why the global research community is increasingly serious about cutting the cord, and how open access is both the foundation for this move, and the next step in the process.

Brandon Butler is the first Director of Information Policy at the University of Virginia Library.
