ou, and do your reforming, if reform you must, that this question of getting the women into the parties from inside.”

The new woman voter acquiesces and asks only how she is to get inside, really inside.

None of the women who worked for suffrage is likely to forget that the election laws in this country are state and not Federal laws, that each state is the judge of its own electorate and of the qualifications for voting in that state. It has been a jealously guarded right, the state's power to determine its own election laws and qualifications, and has been conjured always as the sign and seal of statehood. And the way party committees are made is, in general, a part of the state election laws. Therefore, it is in the states separately
