

Characterization of Atypical Hemolytic Ornithobacterium rhinotracheale Isolates and Comparison with the Normal Non-Hemolytic Phenotype

Jessica Nicole Walters

Dissertation submitted to the faculty of the Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of

Doctor of Philosophy
In Biomedical and Veterinary Sciences

F. William Pierson
Nammalwar Sriranganathan
Robert D. Evans
Audrey P. McElroy
Tanya LeRoith

October 24th, 2014
Blacksburg, Virginia

Keywords: Ornithobacterium rhinotracheale, ELISA, hemolysis, plasmid, turkeys

AAAP Copyright Release Form

The American Association of Avian Pathologists, Inc. (AAAP), grants permission to the Requestor designated below to use the following Material in PhD dissertation at Virginia-Maryland Regional College of Veterinary Medicine:

Walters, J., R. Evans, T. LeRoith, N. Sriranganathan, A. McElroy, and F. W. Pierson. Experimental comparison of hemolytic and nonhemolytic Ornithobacterium rhinotracheale field isolates in vivo. Avian Dis 58:1:78-82. 2014.

AAAP grants the following rights to the corresponding authors of the articles published in Avian Diseases: reproduce the article by photocopying, reprint portions or the entire article in print or other media, display the article in public, incorporate the article in course packs, place the article in a digital repository or archive owned by their employer's institution or compile the article into a larger scholarly work. Permission is granted to the author to use in her PhD dissertation for educational purposes.

Jessica Walters
PhD Candidate
DVM Candidate Class of 2016, Food Animal Medicine
President- Omega Tau Sigma, Lambda Chapter
Virginia-Maryland Regional College of Veterinary Medicine
jnwal06@vt.edu

The Requestor further agrees that AAAP copyright ownership will be noted in conjunction with any use of the Material, including publication. This grant will expire no later than six months after the Effective Date. This grant of permission is valid and comes into existence only when signed by both AAAP and Requestor, and when the document having the original signature of the Requestor has been received.

Signed and agreed by:

Requestor - Signature

 11/13/2014
AAAP - Signature and Effective Date

Jessica N. Walters
Requestor - Printed Name

Bob Bevens-Kerr, AAAP Executive Director
