SUMMARY

Frank Imperatore has consistently contributed his time and talents to making sure Virginia Tech and the Commonwealth of Virginia has the best hazardous waste program possible. He served as president of a national organization of Hazardous Materials Managers at colleges and universities and brought a national conference of his peers to the Roanoke Valley. He used his expertise to ensure that all state agencies get the best waste disposal prices possible while staying in compliance with federal regulations, and has always made customer service his highest priority. His work ethic and innovative ideas have made Virginia Tech's hazardous materials program one of the most respected and efficient university programs in the country.
